

Figure 1: While the US and its allies seem to maintain a smaller production percentage over a larger number of minerals, there are a large number of minerals in which its competitors command > 50% of total global production.